Tetra4D PDF Converter is a free plugin for Adobe Acrobat. Tetra4D produces files that can be imported back into the original CAD system as 3D models. The plugin can export into these formats: 3D PDF, .Q: Finding the step-size to attain the global optimum of a non-linear function I have an optimization problem in which I have to find the step-size for a simplex algorithm to attain a global optimum. Given $f(x)$ which is a non-linear function (which can be defined by two variables and a third variable-may be simple or non-linear functions of one variable) and x_0 as an initial guess. The optimization goal is to find the step-size α such that α is small enough to obtain a very close point x_1 from the initialization point (x_0), such that $f(x_1)$ is very close to $f(x_0)$. Any suggestions on the correct steps I can follow? I understand the usual approach involves taking the second derivative and equating it to 0, but the problem I have is that I don't know the function value at x_1 . A: If you have a good initial guess, then in the simplest case, the necessary condition for you to have an α (any α) such that $x_1 = x_0 + \alpha \vec{d}$ is that there is a unique root x_1 of your function $f(x)$ with all its derivatives. Hence, you need to have a derivative of $f(x)$ when x_1 is at the minimum, and a second derivative of $f(x)$ at that point when that minimum is not unique. The second
