It's no surprise that DAZ Studio 2 has made its way to Windows, you see it's been in its version 4-9 life forever on Mac, and I have never liked the app, it was always buggy, it always felt slow, I didn't like the standard workspace, I always preferred the DAZ 3d scene. The world of 3D and DAZ Studio is a new one to Windows, taking over for the much more powerful 3D artist studio from Maxon. DAZ Studio has always been a developer studio, you have to download the plug-ins and design your scene in its library tools, you hook it up to Maxon's engine, and then the pretty is just a matter of lighting. The whole cheez just feels like it's a series of "if" conditions, and now DAZ Studio feels like it does what it needs to do on Windows, I've been working on the MotorStorm game for like four years, I have long abandoned any software that doesn't work on Windows. So I am probably the most terribad DAZ Studio user ever, and I only have one real complaint, the quality of the pre-built objects is very sub-par for DAZ Studio. Sure, I can add it from the library, but I think it is way better to integrate it into the engine. I'm digressing Having a strong Photoshop skill set is one thing. Experiencing how to use it to its fullest potential is another. In the case of Photoshop, the latter is a challenge appreciated by those with an artistic outlook. LFIER, which is the practice of redesigning a product so drastically that it's actually an entirely new application, is sometimes taken to an absurd extreme, such as during the six-year wait for Photoshop Lightroom 5.

Adobe believes proper selection is a large part of editing, and with New Selection or Shift-click, you can select an object in multiple select mode—enabling you to extract the object from the original photo. Traditional selection tools are improved in Precision mode, which allows you to select more closely. The best example is the Content-Aware Patch feature. The name says it all. You are prompted for a photograph you wish to improve. You then select the area you wish to improve and click OK. Having the computer automatically track the boundary of the area and then fill in the gaps with the parts of the photograph that are similar to the new version of the image will automatically produce some great results. This feature is most powerful when using photos from a digital camera.
